

I have been using the Video Relay Service where I make local phone calls, as well long distance--I feel those are really important where I could contact them through ASL. Please ensure that the FCC makes no further reductions in the VRS rate until the services are available with a reasonable average speed of answer. I want to see it become more visual communication service more than the other telecommunication services. Please also reconsider reimbursement of video mail, as I need a way for hearing people to leave me a message as deaf people too (as that hasn't happen yet). So again, please consider VRS as an important real-time communication service.
